The English wine scene has exploded into life over the past decade, becoming world famous for the incredible quality of the sparkling wine produced, along with some sensational still offerings too. With over 500 vineyards in England and Wales, the South West of England continue to represent some of the top producers. England's climate is much like Champagne's was a couple of decades ago, which is becoming ever more evident as many sparkling wines from our own shores are successfully competing on the global market with Champagne. With increasing demand for local produce and reduced food miles, English wine has become a staple on wine lists across the country.
